The Troy Farmers Market Apple Festival

The Troy Farmers Market Apple Festival vendor lineup is coming together and there's still room at the table for the inspired vendors.

If you've been thinking about it, this is your moment.

We're especially looking for:

Gardeners and small-scale farmers — October is prime time for storage crops. Potatoes, carrots, beets, winter squash, garlic, onions, dried beans, etc. If it came out of your ground this fall, someone at the Apple Festival wants to buy it. Nine hundred visitors looking for locally grown produce is not a small opportunity.

Makers of gifts, autumn goods, and winter wares — hats, scarves, mittens, candles, soaps, woodwork, artwork, preserved foods, etc. The Apple Festival draws shoppers who are thinking ahead. Fall is gift shopping season, and the people walking through the Troy Museum Grounds on October 2 are exactly the kind of community members who want to buy something handmade and local rather than click a shipping cart.

The vendors and volunteers already signed up are bringing or making fresh-pressed cider, apple pie & apple-inspired treats, breads and more.

Live music by Across the hwy from

Jay Snow & the Tone Keepers, will set the mood all day.

The Bear Fair draws families and keeps people on the grounds for hours.

It's a good day to have a booth.

Vendor applications are open at troymtfarmersmarket.com

October 2 will be here before the last apple drops!

Apple Festival is upon us its time to press the apples into cider

An antique wooden apple press transforms autumn harvests into sweet, golden cider through a timeless mechanical squeeze.

The Anatomy of the Press

- The Hopper: The upper basin where whole, ripe apples wait to be fed.
- The Grinder: A hand-cranked or motorized set of iron teeth that shreds the fruit into a pulpy mash.
- The Barrel & Racks: Slatted wooden cages lined with cloth where the wet pulp—known as the "cheese"—is carefully layered.
- The Screw Mechanism: A heavy iron screw or hydraulic ram that applies tons of steady pressure, crying out with a creak of old oak as the fresh juice begins to pour.

Mrs. McLaughlin's golden apples bubbled inside a hand-crimped crust, carrying the scent of cinnamon across the crowded town square for the annual autumn bake-off.

For forty years, Mrs. McLaughlin had won second place. Always the bridesmaid, never the blue ribbon. Neighbor Sister Teresa always edged her out with her secret splash of bourbon.

This year, Mrs. McLaughlin changed her tactic. She didn't use bourbon. Instead, she grated a single tonka bean into her tart Granny Smith and Honeycrisp blend, adding a whisper of vanilla and almond smoke.

The head judge, a stern baker named Lori, closed her eyes at the first bite. The pastry cracked like autumn ice. The filling sang with crisp tartness and deep, warm spice.

When Lori pinned the giant blue ribbon onto Mrs. McLaughlin's apron, the old woman didn't cheer. She just smiled, sliced a warm wedge for Sister Teresa, and whispered
,"Wait till next year."
